Nisreen's Story

Nisreen is from Iraq and was a passionate journalist who worked hard in her studies. But war shattered her dreams, forcing her to flee Syria with her children. Despite fear of bombings and hunger, she remained strong and determined. Her children are her greatest priority, though they miss their extended family deeply.

Because there's no British embassy in Damascus, Nisreen had to travel through several countries to reach safety. Last summer, she and her children arrived in North East Scotland. She has since studied and earned certificates.

Nisreen enjoys art and hopes to one day exhibit her drawings and paintings. She dreams of working with organisations that support vulnerable people—especially women facing violence and those living in poverty.
